

While no less than four different Soviet prototypes of high performance all-weather interceptors have come into view during the past several years, the first has yet to appear in an operational unit.